Master Food Volunteer

Become a Master Food Volunteer!

K-State Research and Extension is excited to offer a program for people who love to cook, are passionate about nutrition, health & wellness, love to learn and want to give back to the community.

What are the benefits of becoming a Master Food Volunteer (MFV)?

- Develop new avenues for serving the community.
- Meet others who share a passion for food.
- Participate in classes, by either leading or assisting, to teach others about food.
- Learn up-to-date practices on food safety and nutrition.
- Take your knowledge of food to the next level.
- Have a great time doing something you love!

What is required of MFVs?

- Volunteers go through approx 40-hour training course, taught by County Extension professionals, State Extension Specialists and industry professionals.
- After training, volunteers give 40 hours of service back to the community under the guidance of their county or district K-State Extension Agent.
- Volunteers must enjoy working with youth and/or adults and be willing to share your love of food through various food-related projects and events.
- If you own or work with any food-related business, you cannot promote those products as a Master Food Volunteer.

How do I apply?

- Application forms are available online at www.maraisdecygnnes.k-state.edu or by calling (913) 795-2829.

When do training classes meet?

- The course is online and you can work at your own pace.
- You will be required to attend two hands-on trainings at your local county office.
